School Board May Nix Health Teacher

Despite two School Committee votes last winter to hire a Health Education teacher at a salary of $14,000 the Committee indicated last night that they would not support the position.

Committee Vice-Chairman told Superintendent John Maloney, who is responsible for screening health specialist applicants, that the Committee would vote against the hiring of the teacher, and that there was no sense in wasting time going through the interviewing process.

"There's no sense putting the cart before the horse. We should have a program made up first," England said.

Maloney reminded England that he had voted against the new position and a Committee member who had voted in the affirmative must make a motion for reconsideration before a new vote could be taken.
Although Committee member Martha Gjestebj was willing to make the motion, the Committee decided to wait until all members were present, as Chairman John Lang-maid was on vacation and member Diana Kornet had left the meeting early.

Maloney stressed the need for uniform standards and goals in the area of health education. The person he was looking for, he said, would be a health specialist who would help to develop a program for the entire school system, who could assist teachers, and unify and eliminate overlapping of sporadic health instruction.

Resident Mary O'Brien was vehemently opposed to the Committee's reversal. "I always thought the School Committee would accept a vote of the committee regardless of personal feelings for the sake of the children," she said.

She said she was appalled and thought it a disgrace that decisions were apparently being made outside meetings, deciding to axe the position.
Committee member Irene Brown agreed, and charged that England "seemed to know" he had enough votes to block the position.

England responded that he wanted to make sure the practical thing would be done and noted that the position was now under the scrutiny of a new committee.

Superintendent Maloney remained uncertain whether he should continue to interview applicants for the job, as the Committee will not vote on the matter until next month.
